

The Birth of the Walsh Style TLS-I and TLS-II

As I have stated in the introduction regarding the old Ohm Acoustics products, I now build Walsh Style TLS-I and TLS-II speakers complete from the ground up. The birth of these speakers is from my desire to bring back to the world one of the greatest inventions in audio in the last 50 years. I have spent more than 30 years listening to the original Ohm products and also building my own versions quietly improving them by listening to complaints from previous owners and also through my own revelations.

My life long pursuit of reproducing high quality music in the home has come to fruition in the new products I now offer, named after their name sake and discoverer Lincoln Walsh. In addition, I also make refurbishing of the old products possible to a much higher degree than was heretofore possible. These products, while constantly improving and changing, represent what is possible in the art, and what is true Art in their creation. Cabinet construction employs some of the newest ideas in fabrication both in stiffness and damping control with laminated hardwood construction and sidewalls that are a full two inches thick. Cabinetry tolerances are held to .015" while critical parts such as magnet structures and voice coils are held to .001" or less. Exotic hard wood finishes are available with hand rubbed Tung oils and Lacquered finishes being standard.

While they are very costly and extremely demanding in construction and time, each unit is lovingly created and hand crafted as an old world Stratavarious Violin, requiring no less than 180 man hours in construction. The reintroduction of these models at extremely low prices, (almost what they were 25 years ago) is my attempt to make such high quality components available to virtually any and all sincere audiophiles and music lovers the world over.

It is my sincere hope that you will find these speakers as visually striking as they are rewarding to listen to and that you will join the ranks of the few privileged individuals that now own a pair of these audio marvels.
